Date of Consultation: Not specified

**Patient History****

The patient, Simran Parveen, a 29-year-old female, presented with complaints of severe stomach ache since the previous night, with no prior known medical history. She had experienced a similar episode three months ago, which resolved after taking an antacid.

**Symptoms****

The patient reported:

- * Severe stomach ache that persisted despite taking an antacid
- * Bouts of vomiting on the previous night and morning
- * No headache

**Diagnosis****

The patient was diagnosed with food poisoning, which was confirmed by the test reports.

**Treatment Plan****

The patient was prescribed a medicine for one week, to be taken after dinner.

**Recommendations****

The patient was advised to:

- * Take the prescribed medicine for one week
- * Come back immediately if symptoms persist or reoccur

**Additional Notes****

The patient received an injection for temporary relief, and was reassured that the experience would be minimal. The doctor also emphasized the importance of following the prescribed medication regimen and seeking immediate medical attention if symptoms reappear.
