**Patient Information****

* Name: Simran Parveen

* Age: 29 years old

**Patient History****

Simran Parveen, a 29-year-old female, presented with a severe stomach ache since the previous night. She had previously experienced a similar episode approximately three months ago, which resolved after taking an antacid. She reported that the pain had returned despite taking an antacid last night and had also been experiencing bouts of vomiting.

**Symptoms****

The patient complained of:

1. Severe stomach ache
2. Bouts of vomiting occurred multiple times
3. No headache reported

**Diagnosis****

Based on the patient's symptoms and medical history, the preliminary diagnosis was made, suggesting food poisoning as the underlying cause of the stomach ache.

**Treatment Plan****

The following treatment plan was implemented:

1. An injection for temporary relief of symptoms was administered
2. Prescription of medicine for a duration of one week, to be taken after dinner

**Recommendations****

The patient was advised to:

1. Take the prescribed medicine as directed for one week
2. Report back to the doctor immediately if symptoms recur or worsen
